

J. Andrew Carlson, MD, FRCP(C) is Professor of Dermatology and Pathology in the department of Pathology at Albany Medical College, Albany, NY. His research interests include melanoma, vasculitis, lymphedema, lichen sclerosus, and HPV infection. After graduation from medical school at McGill University, Montreal, Canada in 1988; he did an Internship at St. Joseph's Health Center, Toronto, Ontario, Canada; an anatomic pathology residency at Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston, Massachusetts; and a dermatopathology fellowship at the University of California at San Francisco, California. Since his fellowship, he has practiced dermatopathology and performed research at Albany Medical College, Albany New York, for over 22 years, where he has been Chief of the Dermatopathology service since 1996. Currently, he is the President of the International Society of Dermatopathology (2013-2016), whose aim is to increase dermatopathology knowledge and promote friendship and scientific exchanges among members of different countries.